- A. Index

Education is often an important issue for individuals with SCI. Frequently, the person with spinal cord injury is young and may not have completed his or her education. Job retraining may be necessary if the individual is unable to pursue the same type of employment he or she had prior to injury.

For those individuals with SCI interested in obtaining a high school diploma or GED, the first step is to contact Adult Education in the area in which you live. If you do not want to obtain a GED and do not have a high school diploma, community college may be an option.

The community colleges have taken the lead in providing educational resources for people with physical impairments, including those with spinal cord injuries, through their Disabled Students Programs. Through Disabled Student's services at most colleges and universities students can receive assistance with notetaking, tutors, and can obtain materials to help get the most out of their education.

English as a Second Language (ESL) classes are provided in several different types of settings such as schools, cultural centers, and community organizations. Local classes can be found through many Adult Education programs.

In addition to the resources listed below, the California State Department of Rehabilitation is an excellent resource for information on assistance in pursuing your educational goals. See Chapter 24 for more information on the State Department of Rehabilitation.

Also included in this chapter is a section on Patient Education Resources. Included in this listing are several excellent SCI self-care manuals, as well as websites that feature various topics related to SCI education.
